It would imperatively lead him to despise all the ordinary needs of conecalment. He could not, I reflected, se so weak as not to see that the most ntricate and remote recess of his hotel would be as open as his commonest casets to the eyes, to the probes, to the imiets, and to the microscopes of the refoce. I caw, in line, that he would driven, as a matter of course, to simlicity, if not deliberately induced to it a matter of choice. You will rememer, parliages, how desperately the Preour first interview, that it was just consible this mystery troubled him so such on account of its being so very

"I have never given the matter a thought," I said.

"There is a game of puzzles," he re-med, which is played upon a map. ne party playing requires another to ad a given word—the name of town, cer, state or empire-any word, in bort, upon the motley and perplexed urface of the chart. A novice in the ame generally sods to embarrass his by lettered names, but the adopt sesets such words as siretch, in haves meacters, from one end of the chart to e other. These, like the over-largely ettered sligns and placards of the areat same observation by dint of being exsively obvious; and here the physical ersight is precisely analogous with emoral inapprehension by which the tellect suffers to pass unnoticed those nsiderations which are topobtrusine) of too palpably self-evident. But this a point, it appears, somewhat above beneath the understanding of the refect. He never once thought it buble, or possible, that the Minister and deposited the letter immediately eneath the nose of the whole world, y way of best preventing any portion that world from perceiving it. But the more I reflected upon the aring, dashing, and discriminating in-emuty of D—; upon the fact that the ocument must always have been at and, if he intended to use it to good urpose; and upon the decisive evidence stained by the Prefect, that it was not idden within the limits of that digniary's ordinary search—the more satisled I became that, to concent this letter. he Minister had resorted to the compre ensive and sagneious expedient of not ttempting to conceal it at all.

"Full of these ideas, I prepared myself with a pair of green spectacles, and ulled one fine morning, quite by acci-lent, at the Ministerial hotel. "I protected my visit as long as possible, and, while I maintained a most an imated discussion with the Minister spon a topic which I knew well had never failed to interest and excite him kept my attention really riveted upon letter. In this examination, I committed to memory its external appear ance and arrangement in the rack; and also fell, at length upon a discovery, which set at rest whatever trivial doub I might have entertained. In scrut nizing the edges of the paper, I observe them to be more chafed than seeme necessary. They presented the broke appearance which is manifested when: stiff paper, having been once folded and turned as a glove, inside out, is re-direted and re-scaled. I bade the Ministe good morning, and took my departur at once, leaving a gold smuif-box upon the table.

"The next morning I called for the snuff-box, when we resumed, quite eagerly, the conversation of the precedng day.
